The tour was originally scheduled for April 12, but was canceled because of bad weather. At the end of February, more than 400 Air National Guardsmen from Illinois, New Jersey and Utah were assigned here on temporary duty. Since then more than 250 have returned home. In the past week, nearly 100 aircraft have made 'pit stops' here. (Photo by Guido Melo)

Airmen selected for the formation will practice 8:30-11 a.m., Tuesday

A shuttle will also run from the same locations from 7:15-9:20 a.m., to take people to practice.

U.S. aircraft pull out of Prince Sultan

Air Force Print News

PRINCE SULTAN AB, Saudi Arabia — Department of Defense officials said the combined air operations center here will be mothballed and all U.S. aircraft operating at the base will be gone by August.

The decision was made by "mutual agreement," said Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld following a meeting with Saudi defense minister bin Sultan in Riyadh Tuesday.

"It is now a safer region with the change of regime in Iraq," Rumsfeld said.

But this doesn't mean an end to the Saudi-U.S. relationship, he added. The military training and exercise program will move to the forefront, and in the months and years ahead, the air base could still be used temporarily for exercises.

The mission of the center has passed to Al Udeid Air Base in neighboring Qatar.

The Prince Sultan center handled air sorties and targets for Operation Iraqi Freedom; the Al Udeid center handled mission planning for Operation Enduring Freedom and for the Combined Joint Task Force-Horn of Africa.

The shift increases the Al Udeid workload, but not intolerably, officials said. On its first day handling the Operation Iraqi Freedom requirement, the Al Udeid CAOC generated about 700 air missions. About 100 were standby close-air-support missions, and about 400 were airlift missions. The rest were tanker, intelligence, surveillance and reconnaissance missions.

The U.S. aircraft were at the Saudi base to enforce the U.N.-mandated Operation Southern Watch. That operation began 12 years ago. In the beginning, U.S., British and French aircraft enforced the no-fly zone south of the 33rd parallel. France dropped out years ago, but the U.S. and the United Kingdom pilots kept on. The necessity for that operation ended with the start of Operation Iraqi Freedom.

At the height of the Iraq war, Prince Sultan based about 200 coalition aircraft. Everything from fighters to airborne warning and control system aircraft flew from there.

There are currently 100 aircraft based at Prince Sultan, and officials expect the last American plane to leave in August. It is unclear whether a small cadre of Americans will remain to keep the base ready in case of emergency, officials said.

FOCUS: COMMUNITY

May brings street bullfights

by Eduardo Lima Community Relations Adviser

The street bullfight season on Terceira Island began May 1 and will continue through Oct. 15.

This type of bullfighting is a very old local tradition. Though its exact origin is unknown, some historians believe it began with the tournaments and jousts noblemen held during special occasions.

Street bullfights have become a well-liked and important part of the summer festivals around the island.

The bulls, usually four, are transported in boxes from ranches in the center of the island to the village where the bullfights will be held. A motorcade of villagers who travel to the ranch to observe the selection of the bulls usually precedes the truck carrying the bulls.

When it's time for the bullfight to begin, usually at 6 or 6:30 p.m., a blast that sounds like fireworks lets everybody know that it's time for the first bull to be released and warns those who don't want to play matador that they should seek refuge behind wooden barriers or high walls along the street.

After the bull is released, eight men — known as "pastores" — control the distance the bull can travel by holding on to a rope attached to his neck as he pursues those who dare harass him or stand in his way.

After the men in the crowd provoke the bull for about 30 minutes, the rope handlers pull the bull back into his box for a well-deserved rest — both for the bull and the men. Two blasts are then used to let everybody know it's safe to walk or drive down the street again, but only for about 10 minutes. This routine continues until all four bulls are released into the street and the bullfight ends.

Another local tradition related to the street bullfights is the food stands called "Tascas." In these portable stands people can find some of the island's best-known local wine, beer, sodas, as well as seafood and pork sandwiches called "bifanas."

I highly encourage all Americans to witness a bullfight while they are stationed at Lajes Field.

To better your chances of finding a safe place from which to view street bullfights it is good to arrive early. More importantly, be careful and use common sense while the bullfights are ongoing.

The next street bullfights will take place Saturday at Corpo Santo in Angra and Canada de Belem in Terra Cha. Sunday there will be a bullfight in Agualva. All bullfights begin at 6 p.m. To find out more about the bullfight schedule, call the Public Affairs Office at 2-3413.

Bullfighting is hazardous to troops

by Staff Sgt. Beverly Isik
Crossroads editor

Officials are warning troops, especially those who are on temporary duty assignments here, or passing through as part of an expeditionary aerospace force, not to participate in the street bullfights that are popular in the Azorean Archipelago.

Because a group of Pastores, or rope handlers, hold on to the bull, street bullfights here may not have the same thrill appeal or look as dangerous as the famous "Running of the Bulls" in Pamplona, Spain, but they can be just as deadly.

Every year, there are fatal injuries in the streets of our surrounding communities, said Eduardo Lima, 65th Air Base Wing community relations adviser.

"We have no official statistics, but I know a lot of people died here on the island," he said.

It's not unusual, according to Lima, for a bull to jump a 6-foot wall, clearing a crowd of spectators in the process.

Americans, military and civilian, are banned from participating in the bullfights by a USFORAZ written instruction implemented in 1993. Before the implementation, Lima said there were a lot of American victims, but the numbers have dropped.

"But I still see Americans in the streets and on walls that are too low for safety," he said.

To be safe, Lima said people should watch from a wall that is at least 10 feet tall. He cautioned that the rock walls lining many local streets do not provide a secure barrier from a charging bull.

"It happens all the time — a 1,200-pound bull rams his horns into those dilapidated rock walls, shakes his head two or three times and the wall comes tumbling down," he said.

U.S. Forces Azores regulations prohibit U.S. military members, civilians and dependents, from actively participating in any type of bullfighting on the island. (File photo)

It's imperative that whoever sponsors a newcomer or someone who is TDY briefs them on the dangers," said Joe Raposo, wing ground safety manager. "For those not properly briefed, TDY could translate to: The bull will

COMMENTARY

An unexpected sign of respect

by Angie McLean
USAFE News Service

RAMSTEIN AB, Germany — As usual I was running late. So, you can imagine my frustration as I approached the main gate of Ramstein Air Base only to find traffic backed up. Nearing the checkpoint I realized that there was a long line of cars and traffic had come to a complete stop as a result of all entrance gates being closed.

Over the past 18-months, there have been many opportunities to practice our patience as we have had to "hurry up and wait" as a result of heightened security. While we realize the necessity, it's still frustrating at times for even the most easy-going folks. This was one of those times for me! I needed to be where I was going, and I needed to be there now.

The German soldiers, the ones manning the gates of American military installations here in Germany, were just milling around, chatting as if those of us in line had all the time in the world.

Things seemed to go from bad to worse. The German guards began walking among the stopped cars, asking us to turn off our engines and headlights. I realized that no traffic was exiting or entering the air base. My feelings of frustration began to turn to ones of concern. Just what was going on?

A few minutes later I noticed blue lights approaching from the direction of German guards arrived at Rhein-Main AB, Germany, Feb. 19 to assist security forces in manning the main gate. Airman 1st Class Donald Shaut, 469th Security Forces Squadron gate guard, teaches Obergefreiter Marus Leide the proper procedures for checking ID cards, licenses, and vehicle registrations at the main gate. the air terminal. Close behind were two military medical buses. Lights were on in the buses, and IV bags could be seen hanging. Then I realized these were more of our wounded warriors being transported from the Iraqi battlefields to Landstuhl Regional Medical Center.

I certainly wasn't prepared for what happened next. All of the German soldiers and our gate guards began walking toward the concrete barriers that divide the inbound and outbound lanes of traffic. As the blue lights neared, more German soldiers seemed to appear from nowhere, lining the road, shoulder to shoulder. Right on cue, without a word being spoken, these soldiers snapped a sharp salute as the buses drove by, rendering arms until well after the last bus had passed.

I was speechless and deeply moved by this show of respect for our fellow soldiers.

totally destroy you."

Once, a TDY sailor was injured during a bullfight and left with several broken bones as a souvenir of his stay on the island, Lima recalled.

In another incident, a TDY soldier was in the street when the bull charged him. The soldier jumped over a wall, but, unfortunately, the bull did too. He left with stitches and quite a bit of dental work, he said.

"This goes to show our situational awareness isn't always what it should be," he said. "If you're in the street when the bull is out, you're participating — not spectating."

While actual participation is forbidden, 65th Air Base Wing Commander Col. Judy

Fedder urges people to get out in the community and experience the unique Azorean traditions. But she cautions that safety must be at the forefront of everyone's mind.

Although considered by many to be a sport, street bullfighting is far from it, Raposo said.

"There's no organization, virtually no safety measures, and absolutely no safety rules," he said. "Everything is left up to chance."

Azoreans are serious about the centuries-long tradition, but even the most experienced person can get hurt or killed, he said.

"The sad thing is, if you're injured, they're going to pick you up, move you off to the side and the fight will go on," he said. "An ambulance will eventually come, but the driver will have to fight the same traffic you did to get into the fighting area."

While it may be hard to resist the temptation, the personal and professional risks are not worth the short-lived adrenaline rush.

Military people who participate in the events are in violation of Articles 90 and 92 of the Uniform Code of Military Justice, and face a maximum punishment of five years in prison and a dishonorable discharge, according to Lajes staff judge advocate officials.
